A) truly

In most markets, you can buy fashion goods. They may look like the real thing and carry famous labels but nearly all are fake. But does this really matter if it means we can dress fashionably but cheaply? Don't we pay far too much for fashion goods anyway? Aren't the manufacturers of the genuine articles just exploiting our ridiculous snobbery?

Understandably, they don't agree and employ investigator Vincent Carratu, to find out who is making the counterfeit goods. Carratu heads his own investigation agency specializing in this kind of crime. Once he knows who the criminals are, he pretends to be a buyer. When he has enough evidence, he contacts the police.

It is a dangerous game, so Carratu takes on as his agents' ex-policemen with experience of undercover work. They need to be able to act and have nerves of steel, as this example shows. One of Carratu's agents, Gerry, was asked to look into a case involving imitation whisky. Gerry pretended to be a buyer for the American Mafia and made contact with the 13 suppliers. In the meantime, the man who had told Carratu's agency about the factory disappeared. He had almost certainly been murdered by the counterfeiters. Yet, despite the 14 15 obvious dangers, Gerry continued and persuaded the gang that his story was true.

But one member, Miguel, was still suspicious and set a trap. He asked Gerry how whiskey was made. Naturally, Gerry knew all about the process but realized that the kind of criminal he was playing wouldn't know. 'How should I know?' he replied. 'I just drink the stuff.' At this Miguel relaxed. There were no more problems and Gerry obtained the information which lead to the arrest of the entire work. This included custom officers and policemen! At last the counterfeiters had been taken in.
